

Hello,

Welcome!

While preparing this first issue of Luminous Fields, it became clear to me that I had to begin with the subject of relating. It is this aspect that begins our sojourn in life: relating with ourselves and with others, what we are taught about life choices, and how we redefine and recreate our relationships! These include relating with ourself, with others, with our various external environments, our choices, and more. Relating or having a relationship is itself wrought with complications. In order to enjoy wellbeing and liveliness, we may consider making necessary and appropriate corrections in ourselves as we practice continually living in awareness of and with our True Self.

Success Story! — Getting Results

A short conversation with a friend revealed she was holding back her growth as an artist. Cluing in I realized that this thought kept her from feeling fully involved in her marriage. Many married people express loneliness, envying their unmarried friends their freedom. Conundrum! Energetically clearing her fear of fulfilling herself by taking her art to the greater community also removed her feeling of aloneness in her marriage.

She felt immediately better about both, and I reminded her that male partners truly enjoy the success of their wives and feel stronger for being participants and for contributing towards happiness in the relationship.

Shall we remember that we indeed must contribute to one another's successes; sometimes, it means not holding back for fear of feeling better than. When we shine with our greatness, our partners shine too, and vice versa; everyone benefits when we share

The heart of the matter is simple: if we observers observed the observed (even ourselves) with clarity and the eyes of divinity, we would not allow others' negating thoughts, feelings, and emotions to sully us, our world, or our expanding perception and perspective of our cosmos...!

So shall we appropriate the sweetness of that pulsating dynamic process of each second continually as we dance in and out of the empty while remaining in it at all times. Thusly, we may enjoy better relating with ourselves and with our cosmic friends—all who wander into our sphere.

As I write this, I sense the space around me become quiet and vast, every little sound present, the light before 8 am still—everything in this room filled with its presence, whole and sated, empty and sated, nothing...!

May each day be a Valentine's Day! May we live the art of divine loving illumining the best in one another. May we smile and be tender!

Celebrating All Our Relations

A single thought can be a portal to other worlds where we live many fascinating lives. We transform into characters of different times, places, situations, discovering that we are each intimately connected. We experience indeed the power of all relationships—they affect us when we are relating and when we are not relating.

The dynamic of our longing is this that even when we think we are not in a relationship, we really are. How can we not be? If we are not in a "relationship" with a significant partner, we are thinking about it and longing for it. Both absence and presence bring us to tears and to laughter, to sorrow and to joy, while our longing unfolds like a strange melody, as we desire the perfect or ideal parent, child, friend and/or mate.

Truly, there is no perfect or ideal; but there is a continual unfolding of elements that cohere, separate, and come together from moment to moment, weaving the destinies of two (or more) people with meaningful dialogue. How delightful is this spark that lights the way forward and inward!

Often, evenness in the relating may be missing and the very aspects we wish to celebrate in each other become hidden, leading to hurt, anger, and frustration. We begin to question our identity and purpose. When questions are not worded rightly, answers cannot be clear and we get caught in mental turmoil, aching for harmony in all our connections fearing greater loss—even that of ones self.

"... that this is a vision to be realized by us for us all, so that all sentient beings may be happy and at peace."

Staying in tune with our deepest inner space would allow the same in others, and then we could communicate with simple loving—commitment and attachment not need, surrender to giving/receiving, supporting each other's greatest vision, and achieving balance of self + other + Self. Relating then would be a communion as it is meant to be.

In this spirit, truly, awareness of our greater self would be a continual gift to our relationships, and particularly those with our mates. We each would then evolve continually for all "relationships are mirrors in which we find ourselves," noted Jiddu Krishnamurthy. And even as we clarify and cleanse the crud of familial connections, we improve our resultant and continuing relationships. Do we but ache for what was lost? Or see all of it as part of the process of removing illusions and finding our inherent divine greatness?

Shall we ask for evenness and happiness in all our relationships? Shall we continually renew our purpose? Shall we remember the power of relationships to make life a celebration of the best in us?

Shall we ask for relatedness that requires deep passion and clarity of purpose, a commitment so profound that it is archetypal, and one that brings us great gifts, deepest friendship in all relations, gifts we would not have dreamed of or expected?

I understand that this is a vision to be realized by us for us all, so that all sentient beings may be happy and at peace.

This is an invitation to weave a new-old relationship in a different way: one that is more intimate than the last for we each know ourselves a little bit better and more clearly than the last time we met.

Thoughts for Meaningful Dialogues in our Luminous Fields...

"The inner and the outer transform one another. Both may be seen as vast and full of mysterious resources and energies that interact in ways we cannot guess at but must experience to construe. Our construals are not the reality; they are the maps and schematic representations on which we base our constructs, such as myths and other theories, and constructions, such as relationship taboos and settlements. We come out at birth, emerge from within. Life forms emerge from one 'within' or another, the root from the seed, the flower from the bud. Thus it is entirely in accord with this metaphor to think that everything has a 'within' and that everything issues from a 'within' – thought, feeling and a sense of meaning for my life included." ~ George Jisho Robertson, London, UK (from Epistles...a compilation of a life's work)

Because You Are...!

(a poem inspired by the wings of a Polyphemous Moth)

Love is when/ you sense everything/ even when it is not there/in flesh and bone/ because your wings turn/ golden—grow eyes in skin.../ you see whole worlds/ wandering around you... / startling...coming close/ until skin dances/ on barks of trees/breeze of music stills/ aches through your hair/ love is like this even/ when it is not there/ because you are...!

(Yours truly...)

"Love enlivens both the lover and the beloved, for love (L.O.V.E.) is the very Life of Vital Energy that runs through your Heart and the Heart of the Cosmos. Generosity of limitless giving is the experience of love as the lover. Gratitude of unlimited receiving is the experience of love as the beloved. Love flourishes in the balance of being the lover and the beloved and in the delight of generosity and gratitude." ~ Yasuhiko G. Kimura (VIA-Vision-in-Action - Philosopher)

Notes About Me... Like you, I am born to fulfill a karmic soul destiny. At some point in time, we meet ourSelf at this critical intersection and know that we cannot avoid our true path, purpose and fulfillment of our potentiality. A creative person, educator, poet, published author, interested in film art, human being, friend, I have made it my goal to study, learn, practice new ways of being that are in calling with my greater destiny. As such, I find myself frequently enthused and excited to be in the play of life. Therefore, what I saw as diversions, I now see as experiences that needed expression, a lesson to be learned. In gratitude, I now am proud to note that I love to infuse a sense of wonder in everything that involves my attention; hence, I also participate as a purpose coach and teach with the added gift of inviting people/students to recognize their "why" of existence. My intuitive development and studies of various holistic modalities led to my developing IE: Intuition-Energetics(TM), which is based largely on Yuen Method and creative resonance principles. I look ahead to assisting you with life fitness needs, so you can experience Success=Manage Efficiency+Manifest Excellence and be simply happy!
